

A

Edwin Powell Hubble

(November 20, 1889 - September 28, 1953)

was an American astronomer. He played a crucial role in establishing the fields of extragalactic astronomy and observational cosmology and is regarded as one of the most important astronomers of all time.

